

SCOPE & RELEVANCE

“Energy materials” is one of the fastest growing areas of research and employment for physicists and chemists. The important driving force behind the progress in energy research over the last century has been largely due to the contributions from physics, chemistry and material science. The need of alternative energy resources is increasingly high in this century and the recent researches provides solution for such needs. The focal theme of the seminar is how physics and chemistry is applied in material science, especially in energy efficient materials.

The program aims to introduce the current research opportunities and the present scenario of the energy efficiency material research. It will help the teaching and student community of physics, chemistry and material science to get exposure about the latest trends in research.
